Trial and Case Highlights

- Dominique was assigned a claim after a judgment against the defense was entered in Small Claims court. Our client immediately wanted to appeal, and we began the case de novo in the Marion County Superior Court. The initial claim arose out of a contract dispute. Plaintiff contracted with our client to install a pool liner in Plaintiff's pool. During the installation, our client noticed an issue with Plaintiff's pool that could cause a major leak. Our client offered a recommendation that would have fixed the issue. Plaintiff declined the service. After about a year of use, Plaintiff reported a leak in his pool. Our client made multiple attempts to determine whether its pool liner installation was the cause of the leak and ultimately determined that it was not. Plaintiff claimed that our client failed to properly install the pool liner, thus causing his pool to leak. The defense successfully proved that there was no evidence that the installation of the pool liner was defective and that it was most likely an issue that was present before our client ever serviced Plaintiff's pool. The Court entered a defense verdict.
- Dominique successfully settled this complex underinsured motorist case a month before its scheduled trial date. The plaintiff was a delivery driver pulled over on the side of the road when an intoxicated driver hit his truck head on. The plaintiff underwent neck fusion surgery for his injuries, failed to return to work, and claimed substantial future loss wages for the remainder of his work-life. Ultimately the case successfully settled for $390,000, which was well under the $1,000,000 demand and policy limits.
- This case involved a biking accident in which the plaintiff rode his bicycle into the side of our insured's vehicle. The plaintiff underwent several procedures to his left and right hips, A/C joint, and groin. Prior to the accident, he was an avid marathoner and Iron Man competitor, and was unable to compete after the accident. Therefore, the plaintiff claimed permanent damages, even though there were no medical findings to support his claim. She successfully settled the matter for $240,000, which was hundreds of thousands of dollars below the $500,000 demand.

- In a case involving a rear-end collision wherein the defendant, while out delivering pizzas, struck the bumper of the plaintiff's vehicle, Dominique successfully negotiated a settlement at mediation. Liability in the incident was not contested, and the plaintiff complained of back and knee injuries, eventually undergoing a total knee replacement surgery. Plaintiffs' counsel initially demanded $550,000 for medical expenses and lost wages; the matter settled for $248,000.
