Based in Wisconsin, Karri Johnson concentrates her practice on insurance defense and subrogation, representing clients across a wide range of industries. Her work spans first- and third-party automobile accident claims, transportation matters, bodily injury cases, premises liability, construction defect litigation, agricultural disputes, and issues involving government entities and municipalities. She also advises on insurance coverage matters, compliance concerns, and provides legal opinions to help clients make informed, proactive decisions.

Throughout her career, Karri has managed cases at every stage of litigation, from pre-suit negotiations and depositions to trial and post-judgment proceedings. She is dedicated to minimizing client exposure while delivering practical and cost-effective solutions.

In addition to her legal practice, Karri has been invited to share her knowledge at national subrogation conferences, where she has presented on emerging legal issues and industry trends.
